On Sunday, 12th January, 1969, I was on duty whilst a march and demonstration organised by the Zimbabwe Solidarity Action Committee and Black People's Alliance took place. I walked with the demonstrators from Speakers' Corner, Hyde Park to Downing Street and later to the vicinity of Rhodesia House, Strand, W.C.2. Just after 5 p.m., several hundred of the demonstrators, almost all of them European, turned away from Rhodesia House towards Duncannon Street, W.C.2, chanting "Let's attack South Africa House". I went with them and saw them smashing the ground floor windows of South Africa House and attempting to enter the building by breaking open a side door in Duncannon Street. At about 5.20 p.m. these demonstrators were facing a cordon of uniform police officers. They were chanting slogans, screaming abuse and throwing missiles at the officers. I saw a man aged about 27, height 5'9", well built, with a large mop of unruly curly brown hair, with sideboards, holding a wooden pole attached to one end of which was a piece of light coloured cloth. When I saw him he was 4 to 5 yards away from me. The cloth was set on fire and he then hurled the pole with the flaming cloth attached towards the building of South Africa House. It passed over the heads of the police officers and
